PAULSEN, THE CHESS-PLAYER. A correspondent of the Boston Journal, writing from Chicago, says of the unparalleled chess feat recently played out in that city by Mr. Paulsen, as follows: "The most stupendons achievement in chess the world ever saw has just been successfully performed in this city, and Louis Paulsen now stands peerless. On Monday ten simultaneous games against Chicago -His opponents were carefully selected from evening he commenced playing blindfolded among the most skilful players of the Chess Club, who used every exertion to checkmate their gallant antagonist

Mr. Paulsen sat apart from every one on the stage of the Light Guard Hall, with his back to the ten boards. Two gentlemen of this city acted as tellers and circulated among the players, calling aloud each move on the different tables, which were designated by their respective numbers from one to ten. Mr. Paulsen would reflect a few moments, and then without apparent effort announce his own move in return. His attitude and bearing were like those of a person in a trance. His head thrown slightly forward, his eyes closed, his figure motionless, and nothing to indicate life save an occasional working of the face when a skilful step was taken by an adversary or a sudden coup de battaille contemplated by himself. The progress was slow, of course slow. At the close of the first evening, however, enough of his feel nervous, and to induce them to use every folk, for home, on Monday, the 5th, and arrive tactic to out maneuvre bim. During the recond evening his advantage over several was clearly to be seen. The spectators became much excited, but the sympathies of those who had no friends playing, were plain-ted against a bost of foes. Mr. Paulsen could at any time recapitulate the precise position of each piece upon every board, and when an occasional difference arose concerning some disarrangement which he detected, his assertions in all cases proved correct, while those who had their eyes open, were forced to acknowledge their error. It was evident that his astonishing memory and concentration enabled him to recall at will each move from the first upon either board, and thus bring it as clearly to his mind's eye as if it were bodily o'clock. A. M. before bim. The third evening was expected to finish this unprecedented feat. The audience was on tip toe with excitement, and every one seemed uncontrollably worked up, except he upon whom all interest centered .-The self-command exercised appeared miraculous, and none would have suspected what an intense, powerful stretch must have been upon that singular brain. Calmly he sat, as if casting some problem in simple interest, magnitude.

Throughout he was subjected to one unheighten his glory. Not only did be play against ten opponents, but fifty-as by a strange license, a few of the audience were allowed to mingle with the players, and at each table two or three deeply versed in chess, seated themselves to advise those whom Paulsen's brilliant attacks had discomfitted. He thus battled with the combined strength of the entire city opposing him. Every player, too, expected him to pregnable.

He agreed to continue, but all thought best to adjourn, and give those who wished an opportunity to play out at the Club room on the next even-

Mr. Paulsen rose quickly when this decis ion was announced, seemingly not jaded in the least. He is an ordinary looking man, with a decidedly German cast of features, and nothing but a singularly broad head to indicate uncommon powers. The games were finally finished last evening-Mr. Paulsen beating five of the remaining seven, and consented to draw the other two, though he might have won even them, as their players were losing coolness. Ten games blindfolded is without a parallel. Mr. Morphy never attempted but seven, and this is outdone .-The whole city is filled with wonder. The victor is decidedly a lion of considerable altitude, and his achievement cannot possibly be excelled under equally trying circumstan-

No wonder that the perpetual and earnest advice to the young man is to go into "ladies' society.' fast, although hell yawns at the end of the road. Yes, your young man's salvation is in the sweet smile and voice, the beautiful graces and accomplishments, of some fair creature, attractive alike in mind and body.

But your young man dare not go and see a young woman be fancies, and make a friend and a companion of her. Will not all the Mrs. Grundies think and say that it means something, and immediately and vigorously set to work to whisper their suspicions loud enough for the world-including the respective families of the young persons-to hear them? Is not your young man a flirt, a desperate fellow in whom there is danger, if he is known to go to see half a dozen girls at the same time? Has not this propriety which pervades our fine modern life something to do with the terrible outlawry and viciousness of the young men? Has not rigid ghastly etiquette driven them from the parlor to the rum-shop and worse?
